Presentation: This presentation will examine the psychoanalytical components of the movie Splendor in the Grass by focusing on the locutionary, illocutionary and perlocutionary aspects of title and its psychoanalytical implications. The talk will explicate the quiddity of neurosis within the interactive interlocutionary dialectics of the personal and the social and will elucidate how the characters' responses and their sundry manifestations in pitch, gestures, proxemics, color, and so forth are embedded within a hysterical reactive mode with significant bearings on somatization, internalization, and shift of libidinal energy. The presentation will then discuss how the aggravating social malaise and its embroiling impacts would enflame and glow the fervor for a return and a revitalization of the realm of childish and childlike innocence.

Presenter: Dr. Sayyed Mohsen Fatemi completed his postdoctoral studies in the department of psychology at Harvard University where he has also served as a Teaching Fellow, an Associate and a Fellow.
